What's working fine for me are: Windows' Date and Calendar APIs Unix's Time::gmtime and friends What do I want and what don't I find in the above? What's a simple self-contained Java implementation of clock_gettime()? A: The initial response was so good and useful I'll offer a fuller attempt, which I'll update as comments come in. FYI, I'm looking for APIs that give me the most accurate timekeeping information I can get. I don't really care if they're self-contained or not. Unix's time_get() is what you want. It's based on the C function, is very efficient, and all new versions of the libc since 1995 can be found on the BSDs, so they're available in pretty much any modern Java library. The JNI's got that one, too, and it's also efficient and easy to use. If you want something that wraps around Unix's function, look at It's extremely accurate and obviously works on all modern OSes. A: Java 1.6 has java.time API
